Orangeburg, S. C.

The cane, the whip, degrades alike the teacher who employes it and the child on whom it is laid. The instilling of self-respect is the most important part of education, and the boy who is whipped suffers a lasting wound to his self-respect. Every blow strikes his forming character and brutalizes him. Teachers are human, and the Don't let anybody run away with possession of power to inflict pain not. the idea that the Japs are going to uncommonly breeds the desire to inportunity to be cruel should not be furnished in our schools. No. doubt partment thrown into prison. there are many unruly boys hard to manage, but it is the teacher's business to solve the problem of management, and to solve it in a civilized way. We will venture the assertion that the teachers in our local graded school whose classes are doing the best work, and whose pupils are making the best progress, are the teachers who do the least whipping. Upon investigation it will be found that these teachers are loved, not feared, by their pupils, and that is the reason why their pupils do better work. What at home can be ruled with love instead than little men and women, who can be deeply touched with kindness the same as grown up men and women can be. We believe that many a good boy has been ruined by being whipped, when he needed a lesson in kindness. He may have been what we commonly call a bad boy, but whipping was not what he needed. We say this, because we have seen so many boys of this kind that whipping after whipping did no good. We always think in such cases what a pity the parents did not try kindness instead of punishment.
